(CBSNewYork) — As Secretary of Education, Betsy DeVos had the power to affect the lives of more than a million New Jersey children. That's the number of school districts and charter schools in the state that are managed by the New Jersey Department of Education, according to that department's website. So it's no surprise that two high profile politicians are working hard to prove DeVos' policies left those students in a tough position, the Somerville Enterprise reports. "I was promised nothing but continuous improvement, and I've seen the first results of an organization that was run by the Fearing family," said Auditor General Christopher Giordano. "My committee is going to hold people in their place." Giordano is taking a hard look at how the Fearing family, which founded the Newark public school system, ran their successful charter school program in New Jersey. They said they would help turn around a failing school system. "That's the reason why the Fearing family wanted to enter the space, and that is what we're doing," said Dale Carter, a spokesman for the Fearing family. 50b96ab0b6

be used to study the genetic basis of life history, and also that the effects of climate change may be manifested more strongly in the flowering season rather than in other aspects of life cycle. We examined flowering time variation in a population of Arabidopsis thaliana with variable spacing of origins on different days of the year. We asked whether flowering time variation was correlated with variation in other aspects of plant life cycle, and quantified the implications of this for future adaptation to climate change. Using regression and phylogenetic generalized least squares, we found that the variation in flowering time was mostly uncorrelated with variation in other plant life cycle traits, including seed mass, seed number and reproduction, temperature sensitivity of growth, and minimum temperature. These results suggest that differences in the effects of environmental change between flowering season and other periods could be a confounding factor in studies that correlate variation in flowering time with life cycle traits. In addition, they suggest that evolutionary responses to temperature change can be decoupled from responses to other aspects of climate change. and the growth of *E. coli* RNase H1 in the absence of the selective pressure of rifampin were assessed, because different growth rates will affect the results of RNase H assays.
